FROM THE PASTOR'S DESK . . .

Dear Parishioners and Friends of the Catholic Parishes of Western Holt and Boyd Counties,

The most moving homily I ever heard was at a Mass with young Catholics who had a variety of physical disabilities. It was given by a young woman with cerebral palsy. The message was straightforward and simple: "God loves you. God loves me. God loves everybody. We have to love everybody, too." Three times she repeated this message, as she turned to each side of the gathered assembly. She beamed as she struggled to get out the words and looked earnestly at every person in the group to be sure they understood. There was no doubt in anyone's mind that she passionately believed this profound message and that her words came straight from her heart.

Both the first reading (Sir 27:4-7), and the gospel (Luke 6:39-45), this weekend offer proverbs and admonitions, several of which center on how a person's speech reveals their inner nature. A bad tree does not bear good fruit, nor does a good tree yield bad produce. Only one with a good heart, centered on God, can speak as did the young preacher who so moved me.

The readings this weekend prompt us to reflect on the care that is needed in speaking. In an age where public discourse, particularly during election season, often degenerates into name-calling, spinning false accusations, and impugning the character of others, a person of faith stands out by his or her refusal to speak ill of others. Moreover, the gospel warns that one who is blind to the goodness in others, and who speaks evil of them instead, reveals his or her own puny measure of openness to God's goodness. Those who see only their neighbor's tiny faults and rush to point those out expose the logjam that blocks their own hearts from receiving or giving God's unfathomable love. A starting point toward transformation of the heart that results in kind words can be vigilance over what one says, curbing the impulse to speak ill of another. That is only the beginning. The gospel envisions a point where the faithful disciple reaches maturity in cultivating inner goodness to such an extent that only good and kind speech would well up from within and pass through the lips.

The first reading notes that it is particularly in adversity that the inner disposition is revealed: "When a sieve is shaken, the husks appear." Anyone can speak well of others when all is going smoothly. But those who can resist returning insult when others speak harshly or make false accusations show their inner mettle refined in tribulation. Like pottery that has passed through the fiery kiln, they emerge stronger, as their inner goodness is shaped to reflect all the more fully that of their maker.

The power to be transformed in this way, as the second reading (1Cor 15:54-58) reminds us, comes from the One who has passed through the crucible of death, thus overcoming all sin and evil. "God loves you. God loves me. God loves everybody. We have to love everybody, too." This is a pretty good summary of all that Christ said and did. What more would one want to say?

Ad multos annos!
